WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

 A Chance of Afternoon and Evening Thunderstorms Over the Northern and Eastern Mountains through Tuesday ***

 Southwest-West Gusts to 25-35 mph From the Cascade-Sierra Crest East Monday ***

The strong high pressure that has been over Northern California is weakening and moving east today as a Pacific low pressure trough approaches the coast. Temperatures will still be about 10-15 degrees above normal in inland areas today, but coastal areas will be closer to normal with stronger onshore flow. Afternoon humidity will be 15-25% or higher in many inland areas. Thunderstorms will develop over the higher terrain across the north and east this afternoon and dissipate during the evening. These storms will produce rainfall, with a direct hit yielding 0.25-0.50 inches. The storms will mainly be in areas where dead fuel moisture is not yet critically low, and live fuel moisture in these areas is still quite high. New ignitions are possible from any strikes, but the potential for rapid spread and large fires remains low.

On Monday and Tuesday isolated afternoon thunderstorms are still possible in the northern and eastern mountains. Afternoon South-West winds will gust to 25 mph in many areas on Monday, and 25-35 mph from the Cascade-Sierra crest east. The winds will be about 10 mph lighter on Tuesday. Temperatures will be closer to normal Monday through Wednesday. High pressure will return with warmer temperatures Thursday through next weekend.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Hot and dry today Cooling trend beginning Monday

High pressure centered over Northern Mexico and Southern Arizona will keep our local region hot and dry again today. There will be a slight chance of afternoon thunderstorms over the Sierra Crest, but elsewhere it will be dry. Daytime highs this afternoon will be in the upper 90s to near 105 across the inland valleys, including the San Joaquin Valley, upper 80s to upper 90s in the mountains, and near 119 across the lower and eastern deserts. Humidity values will drop into the upper single digits to mid-teens across the mountains, with single digits expected in the deserts. Most valley areas today will see relative humidity (RH) values in the 15-25% range. There will be some gusty northerly winds across the Santa Ynez Mountains as well as over the I-5 Corridor area, otherwise winds will generally be variable 8 to 18 mph. After today, an area of low pressure off the Northern California coast will open up into a trough and will start to sag southward across the region in the coming week. This will bring cooler weather to the region along with increasing onshore flow and a deeper marine layer along the coast. High temperatures are expected to lower about 5 degrees each day starting tomorrow with the coolest weather expected to occur by mid-week. Night and morning low clouds and fog will increase in coverage and should spread into the coastal valleys by Wednesday. The threat of thunderstorms over the Sierra should end after today with no thunderstorms expected for the rest of this week. Westerly winds will increase across the mountains and deserts with breezy to locally windy conditions expected to develop each afternoon and evening through the desert passes starting tomorrow. After temperatures bottom out on Wednesday, a slight warming trend will begin, but temperatures should remain near normal over most of the area through next weekend.
